CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION: 1-5

The rise of pragmatic issue-oriented Foreign Policy behaviour and the primacy of national interests in inter-Arab relations.

CHAPTER ONE: 6-16

The dynamics of Arab States regional Foreign Policies in the Post-Camp David era and the rise of new power centres (eg, Syria, Iraq and Saudi Arabia).

CHAPTER TWO: 17-29

Egypt's regional Foreign Policy objectives and regional developments contributing to the Arab States rapprochement with Egypt.

CONCLUSIONS: 30-39

The Arab-Egyptian rapprochement reflects a moderate position to the Arab-Israeli conflict. It is a result of perceived regional threats, a strategic imbalance vis-a-vis Israel and growing economic constraints.
